Why Employment: Evidence and Value of Earned Income

all Chicago
making homelessness history

@allchicago_mhh
Most people experiencing homelessness want to work.

People experiencing homelessness consistently rank paid employment alongside healthcare and housing as a primary need.*

People experiencing homelessness often attribute their homelessness to unemployment and insufficient income.

Most people experiencing homelessness want to work.

Looking for Employment

- Yes, 95%
- No, 5%

Employment is an important factor in preventing and ending homelessness.

Numerous studies find that increased income is a strong predictor of a person exiting homelessness.*

Earned income and current or recent employment are associated with shorter duration of homelessness.

---

Employment services for people experiencing homelessness are cost-effective.

• Employment services offered within supportive housing are cost-effective and benefit tenants, funders, and society* through increased employment, earned income, and lower dependence on benefits.

Panel Discussion

(1) Can you tell us about some of the ways you have partnered with workforce/housing groups and how those partnerships help participants achieve their goals?

(2) Can you tell us what has been the most impactful and most sustainable types of partnerships?

(3) Can you share what's gone wrong and how you've gotten back on track? (staff transition, funding shifts, etc....)

(4) What is a key takeaway or lesson learned on creating a mutually beneficial partnership?
Panel Discussion

(1) Can you tell us about an experience when housing providers were able to connect you with employment that supported your goals?

(2) Can you tell us about one or two experiences when employment referrals or services didn't match your needs?

(3) What are the keys to successfully connecting jobseekers experiencing homelessness to jobs that are a successful fit?
Key Points

■ 1: Find partners providing high-quality employment services and connect to them about improving referrals, coordinating and outcomes for jobseekers. Don’t do it all yourself!

■ 2: Funding usually follows populations (youth, adults, veterans, re-entry, etc). So: approach youth employment providers; let them know they are serving your population; partner with them to expand current resources.

■ 3: Participate in state and regional planning to prioritize jobseekers experiencing homelessness and promising models.
